Once you get to 450 heads, though, you get down to very low probabilities. And at one or zero heads, you are a whisker above zero. The same sort of thing is true with our DNA. Because there are so many possible combinations of mom's and dad's DNA in each sibling, the siblings all tend to be pretty close to 50% related.

This finding fits very well with the idea that baldness can come from someone's maternal grandfather. Because each son has a 50-50 shot of getting an X from their maternal grandpa through their mom. The X and the Y chromosome determine whether someone will be a boy or a girl. If someone has two X chromosomes, then she is almost always female.
