Advanced Search. Search Menu. Judith B. Steinhoff explores the fourteenth century as a liminal age for art in Siena (p. 5). She acknowledges that the “Golden Age” of Sieneese painting arrived early in the century while her major interest reaches into the era after the Black Plague, 1348 – 1349, and continues through the last decades of the century. In this later era she finds an “extremely sophisticated and self-conscious sponsorship of art” intended to promote both religious and ...

ON MID-TRECENTO SIENESE PAINTING. For many decades after its publication in 1951, Meiss' s book, Painting in Florence and Siena After the Black Death provided the dominant model for understanding painting of the second half of the fourteenth century. In that now-classic work, Meiss advanced his theory that the calamitous plague of 1348 had a devastating impact on trecento culture and the art it produced.

In Sieneese Painting after the Black Death: Artistic Pluralism, Politics, and the New Art Market, Judith B. Steinhoff accepts that such a change did take place and argues that it was due to shifting demographics that set in motion alterations in workshop organization and patronage, which stimulated a style that embraced “continuity and change.” Steinhoff rejects notions that Sieneese art of the second half of the trecento is backward-turning, mannered, and artistically weaker than that of ...
